END

Lewiston looked like a ghost town of the West. It was high noon and not a single person who lived there could be seen on the Main street. A small dark colored dog ran across the muddy street and barked twice. Then the animal turned to the north and walked slowly down an alley. The shades were drawn tight in every house. The bark of that dog was the signal that somebody was coming into town.

The man riding the powerful stallion realized he was up against a new experience in his life as a law man. The entire hostility of Lewiston was directed against him. The people should have been thankful that he had finally arrived. But instead they hated his very existence at that moment. For in his coat pocket he carried a warrant for the arrest of Leo Kagan. And to Lewiston, Leo Kagan was like a Robin Hood!

There was no need to ask the identity of the man on the horse. He wore a Prince Albert coat. And around his hips were two hand tooled holsters in each of which rested a .45 Colt. His left hand held the reins of his horse. His nerves were taunt for at any moment, Death could be hurled at him.

The sun struck the barrel of a .44 that was almost in direct line with his head. Pete Allen, at the side of a house, was drawing a perfect aim on the man he had been paid to kill. Before he knew what happened, the right hand of the Prince Albert Kid went for his own .45. There was but one shot and Pete Allen dropped his gun as a slug tore into his hand. In a second the famous man of the West was off his horse and he dashed over to the frustrated killer who had dropped his own gun.

"Don't go for that gun," he warned. "You are my prisoner. Walk with me to the sheriff's office."

At the sound of that shot, the shades in many a house went up briefly. Then they came down again. Jim Couriland realized that things had not worked out as planned.

"Better tell Leo," he said to Mike Goodkind, "that Pete failed. He's being taken to the sheriff's office."

Sheriff Dan Leonin had the door opened as soon as the Prince Albert Kid and his prisoner approached. Then he looked at the wounded man.

"Guess we'll get Doc Bradley to fix that hand of yours, Pete. You weren't cut out for a killer. Good thing you missed that fool chance to think you were somebody big. Did Leo Kagan pay you to do this? Or did you get the idea all by yourself?"

The prisoner didn't answer as the sheriff lead him to a cell. Ten minutes later Doc Bradley came and treated the wounded man.

"Maybe this town will get some sense into its head," he said to the sheriff. "It's been dying ever since they closed down the silver mines. They could get a new start by supplying the ranchers and the homesteaders with goods. Instead they take handouts from Leo Kagan and think he is the best man in the West. About time they knew him for what he really is. A dirty killer and robber."

Having said what was on his mind, the doctor left without so much as a glance at the Prince Albert Kid. He crossed the street and walked to his office. Still there wasn't another person on the street.

"Doc's an honest man," complimented the sheriff. "He's glad you are here. Chances are that Leo Kagan will pay him a visit and want to know if he talked with you. So he's playing safe and will answer with the truth. A big NO. Now what do we do with Pete Allen?"

The famous law man of the West sat down on a chair. He wanted to think things out. He didn't reply for almost five minutes.

"Leo Kagan is right here in town," he finally said. "He can't escape. I have Major Powell and his Pawnee scouts surrounding every possible way of getting out of town. And if he did, they would pick up his trail at once. My task is more than arresting Leo Kagan. Lewiston must have its eyes opened. The people of this town must see how rotten a man Leo Kagan is. If they do this, I think they will stop living in the past. Just now I want to sit tight. Pete Allen messed things up by not killing me. I am certain he has Leo Kagan worried. And a worried man can't think straight."

Leo Kagan, by a back way, had reached the house of Jim Courtland. There was a sour look on his face as he heard how his plans had miscarried.

"If that fool Pete Allen talks, the folks here may go against me," he concluded. "Either I got to get him out of jail or kill him."

"As far as this town is concerned," interrupted Mike Goodkind, "We are all finished. Let's get out of here while we have a chance to save our own skins. Major Powell and those Indian scouts of his have all the mountain trails covered. We could go through the old mine shaft and come out near the river bed. We walk on the abandoned railroad trestle and head for the Bar-Q Ranch. We can get horses there and then go to Mexico."

"They think I am somebody here," half shouted Leo Kagan. "I am going to get rid of Pete Allen tonight. Then we'll do what you say. Maybe we'll come back again. We need a town where the folks think I am a big shot."

Back at the sheriff's office, Pete Allen had been questioned again. He still refused to talk.

"Let me get this through your thick skull," pleaded the Prince Albert Kid. "You tried to kill a federal officer. You will not be tried here. You are coming back with me to the county seat. You will be tried in a federal court. That means you will get from five to ten years for what you did. You are willing to let those years of your life just slip by because you think Leo Kagan is such a big hero. Do you know he shot down two men in cold blood when he held up the railroad train at Santa Fe? And he raided a small ranch and killed an old man and his wife. He's a cold blooded killer not a hero. Get that through your thick skull. He'd even kill you if he thought it necessary to get rid of you."

It was about two in the morning. There was neither the moon nor a single star in the sky. A man crept slowly along the side wall of the sheriff's office. He carried a large packing box in one hand. Then he stopped before a barred window. He placed the box underneath the window and climbed up on it. From his holster he took his six shooter. He fired three times and then threw the gun into the cell. His shots had been aimed at the figure sleeping in a cot beneath the window. As he turned around he heard a strange noise. Figures appeared from the other side of the sheriff's office. Suddenly lights began to appear. Each man held a flare in his hand.

"Just stay there, you rotten killer," shouted the sheriff. "We all saw what you did."

"Are you convinced now folks," spoke the voice of Doc Bradley, "that Leo Kagan is no Robin Hood. He's hoodwinked this town long enough. Let's forget him like a bad nightmare."

"He paid me to kill the Prince Albert Kid," added the voice of Pete Allen. "Now I know him for what he really is. He thought I was sleeping in the cot in my cell. I couldn't believe it when the Prince Albert Kid warned me. Said that Leo Kagan would probably try to silence me. Nothing can keep my mouth shut now. What a fool I have been. I thought he was something big. Wanted to be like him. But all the time he was using me. Let me tell you all something important. He has two men helping him. I know who they are! Jim Courtland and Mike Goodkind are in with him. Get them now before it's too late."

The next day Major Powell and six of his Indian scouts entered Lewiston. Leo Kagan, Jim Courtland, and Mike Goodkind were turned over to the army officer to take to the county seat.

"I'll bring Pete Allen in myself," explained the Prince Albert Kid. "He will have to serve a prison sentence for what he did. But I will ask for leniency and it will be the minimum sentence."

The townsfolk lined up and watched the last of a bad nightmare vanish. Now all the shades were up on the windows. There was sunshine in the sky. Doc Bradley and the prominent citizens who had watched the event of the night before had talked with all the people. Now the Prince Albert Kid had some advice to give before he left.

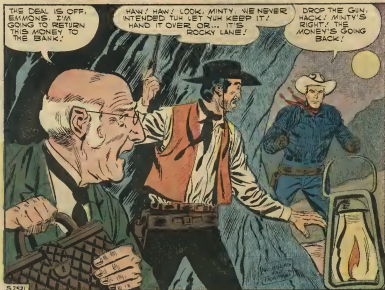

"You were all in a mood for something like Leo Kagan," he explained. "You were bitter against the mining company. They were blameless. The vein simply ran out. There isn't an ounce of silver left in that mine. What you have to do now is to re-establish this town. It can become a center to supply the ranches and the homesteaders. I think this town has learned its lesson."

And the records show that for the next following quarter of a century, Lewistown didn't have a single major crime committed within its boundaries.

Automatic Firing Tripod Machine Gun

IT'S MAGAZINE FETTER—SWIVELS IN ALL DIRECTIONS

Kids, here's an authentic reproduction of a U.S.A. Type 1917A3 water-cooled machine gun, loaded with dry-ice ammunition. This high-powered hunk of high-tech equipment loads, aims automatically right into the magazine like a real machine gun. Then, by means of the automatic recharging device it fires 30 rounds just as fast as you pull the trigger. It sets up steadily on its tripod, and the swivel base turns in all directions to assure complete coverage and range, with a special sight attachment to insure a direct hit.
